In the southern section of this quay there are ships undergoing repairs [redacted] At the quay of the "Quarantine Mole" two empty Russian steamships, probably waiting to be loaded, were berthed.

25X1

On the squares opposite the customs house, south of the quay, many cases containing material which Russia had sent to the Milan Fair and which she was to send to the Smyrna and Salonica fairs, were stored. The machinery sent to the Milan Exposition appeared abandoned and the parts not protected by crating ~~became~~ becoming completely rusted.

The quay of Quarantine Harbor is serviced by portable cranes, perhaps five tons in weight, on which, despite all attempts to cancel out the inscriptions, it was impossible to hide their North American origin.

Anchored in the New Harbor [redacted] was a newly-built Russian tanker.

[redacted] however, [redacted] it had engine trouble.

by the southern mouth of the port.

The one military vessel in port was a tri-funneled cruiser [redacted]

[redacted] It was moored to the outer breakwater. It had artillery pieces located on the sides and a tripod mast.

During the entire stay in Odessa, [redacted] continuous daily flights of turbojets. They numbered two or three per flight and took a general northwest-southeast course and back again.

[redacted]
[redacted] there was genuine relaxation of discipline. [redacted] several quarrels between workers and gang leaders, whose words, curiously, would be almost ignored, while the recriminations emanating directly from the ship seemed to be heeded much more. [redacted]
